“I am very proud and honored to receive such an important award from an organization that recognizes women business owners who dare to be innovators and visionaries,” commented Angela Drummond-Rodgers. “It has always been important to me to connect and act as a mentor to young women entrepreneurs. I have been very fortunate to have had many mentors over the years, ranging from other business owners, clients, friends, and family who have helped me to be more strategic in my life and in my business.”

Enterprising Women magazine conducts an annual survey of top women entrepreneurs who are creating, building, and leading some of the most dynamic enterprises in the country. The magazine’s spokesperson commented, “Our Enterprising Women of the Year Class of 2011 is an amazing group of women. Nearly every company represented on this list had significantly increased its revenues in the past year, despite the economic downturn. Many had huge increases in revenues -- double or even quadruple increases. Each winner also demonstrated a track record of community leadership and the important component of mentoring other women in business or being role models for girls who aspire to be entrepreneurs.”

Drummond has received numerous awards and accolades in her career. She is a frequent speaker on the subjects of leadership and change management. She has been featured on TV, radio and in numerous print publications. Drummond will be presented with her award at magazine’s “Enterprising Women of the Year” Award event on March 10th-11th in Boca Raton, Florida.
